Rebecca Villarreal
Senior Director
Jobs for the Future

Rebecca Villarreal is a Senior Director at Jobs for the Future's Center for Justice & Economic Advancement. Her work focuses on building comprehensive talent development strategies that increase economic opportunity for individuals and economic prosperity for communities with a focus on economic mobility for individuals who have been involved with the criminal legal system. She has 20 years of experience facilitating complex partnerships and collaborations between departments of corrections, education and training providers, state workforce and education systems, and community-based organizations in service of learners from historically excluded populations, such as people with a conviction history, students of color, and students from low-income backgrounds. Prior to JFF, Rebecca worked for nearly seven years in private philanthropy serving as the Director of Education Philanthropy at Ascendium and a Program Officer at The Kresge Foundation. Rebecca has a doctorate and master's in education policy and leadership from the University of Maryland, and a bachelor's of journalism in strategic communications from the University of Missouri School of Journalism.
